

ParkinsonNet Australia

Research Project

Improving care for people with Parkinson's

ParkinsonNet is a multidisciplinary model of care from the Netherlands that has been shown to improve outcomes for people with Parkinson's. This research project is testing the model in Australia.

We want to hear from physiotherapists, occupational therapists, speech pathologists and exercise physiologists working in Tasmania or Western Victoria, about how often and how confidently you treat people with Parkinson's, and what supports and training might help you in the future.

The online survey will take about 15 minutes and is open until 15 March, 2026. Completing the survey makes you eligible to win one of two $150 vouchers.

This is your chance to help improve care for people with Parkinson's in Australia. Even if you don't currently see people with Parkinson's, we are interested in your opinions.

Have your say now:
www.parkinsonnet.au

